Why so many Free Family Genealogy Web Sites?

Unfortunately, the free “official” genealogy web sites and records for New Brunswick are limited.

BACKGROUND: What follows is explanatory material from the Provincial Archives of New Brunswick web site to explain precisely why for nearly a century after the province’s founding, recording of vital records was left to the counties and other institutions.

“In April 1887, the government of New Brunswick passed an Act (The Vital Statistics Act) to provide for the registration of vital events such as births, marriages and deaths. Prior to the Vital Statistics Act of 1887 there was no requirement to record such information, nor a system in place to collect and preserve this information. Some information prior to 1887 was collected by the counties but these records are limited.

Births (1810-1887 & 1888-1913)

Birth records are limited prior to 1887. However many people did complete "late registrations of birth" for birth dates prior to 1887 and in one case the oldest birth registered in New Brunswick is for someone born in 1810. These late registration were completed when people needed proof of birth, especially for government programs. New Brunswick birth information is held in private holdings for 50 years and then released for public viewing.

Marriages (1812-1887 & 1888-1958)

Marriages in New Brunswick are available to the public for 1847-1958. Marriages from 1812 to 1887 were registered within each county. However researchers will find that records for marriages made between the mid-1880s to 1958 are more extensive. New Brunswick marriage information is held in private holdings for 50 years and then released for public viewing.

Deaths (1815-1887 & 1888-1957)

The first Act to Provide for the Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in New Brunswick was passed in 1887. It provided that civil registers for births, marriages and deaths be created by the deputy registrars within the various counties. As a result, county death registers were created and maintained between 1888 and 1920. Legislative changes in 1920 resulted in the records being kept centrally. New Brunswick death information is held in private holdings for 50 years and then released for public viewing.

Census Records (1851-1911)

The first national census was held in Canada in 1851 and was held thereafter every ten years. In 1956, censuses were conducted every 5 years. The last census to be made public was the 1911 Census of Canada. The next census to be release to the public will be the 1921 Census of Canada which is schedule for release in 2013. Prior to 1851, smaller censuses were taken of some cities and communities, such as the 1824, 1834 and 1840 Population Census of New Brunswick as well as early Acadian and Loyalist census. Many of these censuses provide little detail other than the number of people in a given household. In the case of early Acadian censuses, property and possession were included in the report.

Directories

In the 1860s, Thomas Hutchinson published several directories. An early directory published in 1864 for the city of Saint John and two later directories for the whole province came in 1865/66 and 1867/68. These directories included the name of the residents, street address, community, county and occupation.

Land Grants & Petitions (1784-1997)

Many early immigrants, such as loyalist, acquired Crown land through grants and petitions. These land grants cover a large period of time, from 1784 to 1997. The grantee receives a legal document authorizing possession of the land. These records were created and maintained by the government and can provide information such as grantee name, location (county, parish) and acres of land. Another valuable document in regards to land was Land Petitions. Those who wished to obtain a grant of Crown land submitted a petition to the Lieutenant Governor (later to the Crown Land Office) describing his or her circumstances, need, family, and any service (usually military) rendered the Crown which would reflect favorably and put the petitioner in the good graces of the Administration. The Lieutenant Governor in Council, acting as a Committee of Council on Land would approve or disallow the petition. If the petition was allowed, an Order/Warrant of Survey would be issued to the deputy-surveyor who had to establish the boundaries of the grant to be issued. Land petitions can contain very detail information on a person life especially as they plead their case for land.

Military Records

From colonial French and British soldiers to First & Second World War personnel, military records can offer a very detailed glimpse into a person's life. These records can provide personal information such as date and place of birth, parent's names, health data (height, weight, scars) as well as military information on unit(s) served, rank, rates of pay plus their location at a given time (battles, bases, ships). Many World War One units maintained a daily diary and are a great resource when following the life of our WW1 soldier. These diaries mention names of soldiers in companies or on duty. Diaries will also give detailed accounts of front line battles as well as rest periods of units. Copies of Military Records can be obtained from the Library and Archives of Canada in Ottawa. If a relative served in the military, they may have belonged to a local Legion. Some Legion may have information on former members such as membership dates and photographs.

Immigration Records

When you research your family tree you will most likely reach a point where an ancestor immigrated to Canada from overseas. Immigration records such as passenger list can be very beneficial to those of European descent such as Irish and English. The 1901 Census and 1911 Census may indicate year of arrival to Canada. Death records can also provide the number of years the deceased resided in Canada and cultural background of the deceased.

Newspaper Vitals

Newspapers can provide a wealth of information in regards to vital events such as births, marriages and deaths however early newspapers may not have vital events listed in a common section as is the case with newspapers today, therefore researchers may have to scan through early newspapers for scatter vitals. By the mid-1900s, vitals were placed in a common area in newspapers. Obituaries or death notices can provide great detail into a family as these vitals tend to list not only the date and place of death but also the names of children and location of burial. Early death notices often indicate the reason of death unlike notices of today. It is important to note that publishing a birth, marriage or death notice in a newspaper was, and still is, not mandatory so be don't be surprised if you come up empty handed on your newspaper search for a death notice.

Cemetery Records

If you're still having difficulty finding information on a person and the person is no longer living, perhaps a visit to a cemetery is in order. Headstones can provide information such as dates of birth and death. More recent headstones sometimes offer information such as marriage date. Recent trends in headstone inscription include listing the names of children on the back of the headstone and images engraved on the headstone such as portraits or images of the deceased favorite interest. Visiting a cemetery can also be beneficial for gathering information on recently deceased relatives since official government information is not released to the public until 50-100 years has past.

School/Education Records

Schools records are a good source of information. Early records such as teacher petitions, certifications and copies of licenses can provide an insight into a person's life and profession. The Provincial Archives holds the "Petitions for Teachers' Licenses and Payment" file which covers 1812-18882. School records can also show the pupils in a school and class/teacher. Some later school records will also list the names of the student's parents and the birth date of the student. Though student marks are not common they can be found in some school records. Currently, school records can be search up to more recent years, such as the late 1980s, which can be beneficial when research more recent subjects.

Business & Employment Records

Though business records are private and usually held within an organization, there are items that can be used to research a business history. In 1871, John Lovell published Lovell's Canadian Directory for 1871. It was a two volume work containing the names of professional and business men and other inhabitants in the cities, towns and villages of the Canadian provinces. Another source of data may be located from old phone books.

Local History Groups

Finally, you may find further information on your family or a person in your family by contacting a local history group in the area that your family lived. While these groups will not do all the work for you, they may have photographs or data in their holdings that may be of value to your research. Keep in mind that these groups are mostly made up of volunteers and are non-profit organizations so if they do not charge a fee for their work/assets; it is customary to offer the group a donation. This will ensure that their good work can continue. There are also several culture societies in existence that can be of great assistance with understanding your family cultural background. And if you become overly interested in genealogical research or have a great love for local history, perhaps you might find pleasure in joining a local history group where you can meet with people with a similar interest and share stories and ideas.”¹
